Amacı / Purpose	This course analyzes the social histories, socio-economic conditions, and current challenges confronting various racial, ethnic, sexual, gender, and other minority groups in literature. Various competing theoretical frameworks are utilized, and the general principles of dominant-minority group relations are examined. The politics and social construction of "race" in the is also studied, focusing on how the Jews and the Irish became "white" over time, and why some social groups adopt a racial identity, while others adopt an ethnic identity. Numerous video documentaries and movie clips are shown to demonstrate how the course material applies to actual minorities, and most lectures are delivered in PowerPoint slides that can be downloaded online.	--
İçeriği / Content	Aside from the English, every group of immigrants has experienced some degree of exclusion or discrimination that temporarily (or permanently) transformed them into "minorities". This course examines the ethnic experiences of those groups (and various religious, racial, gender and sexual minorities) to see how their experiences have shaped and changed western society. Students who take this course should gain a much better understanding of why various minority groups act as they do, allowing you to live and work more effectively in a multicultural environment.	--
